

Patterns: Lived Experiences + Observations

Morning
routine
videos

Seeing gym
transformation
TikToks

Men's self-improvement content

Fitness influencers
showing ideal bodies

Pressure to always be productive

People only showing their best moments

Feeling
like rest
means being lazy"

Comparing myself to people online

Social media shapes how we determine what being healthy, productive, and succesful looks like to us.

Phenomenon + Inquiry Questions

Why does wellness online look so perfect?

How does comparison affect self-esteem and mental health?

Social media can make the feeling of wellness and self improvement feel like a standard that people have to represent everyday and it supports their actual well-being.

Does a feeling of motivation turn into starting to compare yourself to others, feel pressure, or make you feel insecure?

How do fitness influencers affect body image?

When does motivation become pressure?

Potential Popular Culture Artifacts / Lense

Gym Transformation TikToks

Men's Self-Improvement TikToks

Wellness Podcasts

These viewpoints can help me examine how popular social culture connects wellness with physical appearance, discipline, and success.

Men's Health Magazine Covers

Grooming and Fitness Advertisements